Håfa Adai University of Guam Faculty:

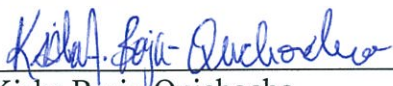

At the University of Guam (UOG) and throughout Micronesia, there is no academic journal where undergraduate students can submit and publish their research. Thus, the UOG Press is working to create the Undergraduate Research Journal of Micronesia, which will highlight the research of our undergraduate students, allowing local and regional scholars and students to see what our undergraduate students' research interests are and the kind of research that they are producing. This will be the first journal of its kind, and it is the hope of the UOG Press that the journal will become an annual publication and that it will be able to expand to the rest of the region.

For this first issue of the Undergraduate Research Journal of Micronesia, UOG Press will be focusing on the research of undergraduate students from the University of Guam. We are requesting for your assistance as faculty members. If you know of any students who are currently enrolled in 300- or 400- level writing and research intensive courses (e.g., a capstone or thesis course)—where they are producing research papers on local or regional topics—or if you know of any alumni who recently graduated this past Spring or Summer, then please encourage them to submit their research.

The deadline for submissions is December 22, 2016, 5pm. UOG Press is anticipating to publish the journal in Spring 2017.

UOG undergraduate students who meet the submission requirements are highly encouraged to submit their work. For more information, please refer to the call for submissions or e-mail MARC Publications Editor Kisha Borja-Quichocho: kquichocho@triton.uog.edu

Senseremente,

Kisha Borja-Quichocho
